GENERAL DESCRIPTION

Benchmarking involves the process of improving performance through continuous setting, understanding and adapting key functions and processes identified within the context of a business activity.

The main objective of the technique of benchmarking is to improve any given business process mainly by measuring performance and best practices. Businesses studying best practices have more opportunities to gain strategic, operational and financial advantage.

For one steady harvest of the benefits from the benchmarking process, the entrepreneur may need to make significant changes in the general philosophy of the company, according to the results of benchmarking.

The inner workings and processes of an enterprise which addresses the benchmarking tool are:

- Management
- Strategy
- Communication
- Human Resources
- Ergonomics, Health and Safety
- Information, monitoring trends
- Information technologies
